

Biography (Hunter Briggs)

My name is Hunter, and I'm currently a 3rd year Ethnic Studies major here at OSU. When I'm not in class and studying, I work with Integrated Learning for Social Change within Diversity & Cultural Engagement, where our team uses interdisciplinary approaches to engage different communities on campus and off, and promote creative action for change. Thanks to ILSC, I am able to work closely with Wilson Hall's Arts + Social Justice Living-Learning Community in order to help build community leaders and organizers amongst our first-years, who will go on to lead our student body in the not-so-distant future. Aside from school and work commitments, I spend another portion of my time being involved with M.E.Ch.A. (Movimiento Estudiantil Chicano de Aztlán), where we students plan actions to address societal ills that harm our family, friends, and countless others in this country. Though I am still considering several options for life after graduation, I am leaning towards pursuing law school, where I will focus on international relations and human rights law. When I'm not in school, I'm either drumming, reading, or cooking for family and friends— the last hobby being more of a life passion than anything!
