

Ian Redding's Platform Statement

House of Representatives

2/17/2017

My name is Ian Redding, and I would be honored to earn a seat as an undergraduate in the ASOSU House of Representatives. With the uncertainty surrounding us in the world today, I believe it is more important than ever to become an active member of one's community. As a member of ASOSU's House of Representatives, I will work hard to ensure that in our OSU community no voice goes unheard. Student government representatives should only work for the benefit of the students that they represent, and I will make it my personal mission to listen to the concerns of all students, and work to address those concerns within ASOSU.

Between high school and college I took a ten year hiatus, and as such, I bring with me ten years of invaluable real-world experience. I understand the issues facing transfer students, because I am one. I understand the issues facing College of Forestry students, because I am one. Most importantly, I understand the issues facing all students, and will work tirelessly to improve student life for everyone who has chosen to join the Beaver community and attend Oregon State University. Our community is beautifully diverse, and no student should ever feel that they have been marginalized or discriminated against, and no student should ever feel unsafe while on campus or anywhere in Corvallis. If you feel that your voice is not being heard; if you feel intimidated or afraid to speak up, please feel free to let me know. I will always be available to listen to the concerns of all students, and will do whatever it takes to address those concerns so that everyone at OSU feels that their voice has been heard.
