

My Platform

Having been involved with ASOSU since I started attending Oregon State University, being elected as a Senator last year, and following my time spent in high school as Vice-President of the ASB, I have continually striven to be involved and to make a difference within any student government.

I've learned that there's an important distinction between running for the students of OSU and running with. Although both are integral for a successful campaign and even more so for a successful Representative, I ultimately find that working with students is the most important thing that you can do within student government. I think that means three things:

1. Advocating for student voices.
2. Advances those voices within ASOSU.
3. Achieving great things!

I have experience working with ASOSU's VoteORVote campaign, have been an ASOSU Representative of the House this past year, and understand what it's like to be a part of ASOSU—and, consequently, part of the larger OSU community.

As a Representative, I will focus my efforts on promotion and outreach and make sure that each voice is heard. I am largely interested in expanding office hours for Representatives and Senators and also making sure that students are aware that they have access to one-on-one conversations with each. There are some students that are not even aware as to what ASOSU is, and I think that it's incredibly important to expand our presence in the community and to make sure that the voices of the students are being best expressed by both the House and the Senate—all branches, for that matter.

A vote for me means a vote for inclusion, appropriate representation, and continuing outreach within the OSU community. Together, I know that we can advocate, advance, and achieve great things.

Thank you, and remember that you're voice is the one that matters!
